Outline your relevant raiding experience, including the guilds you were in previously and why you left them. *

Cutting Edge xp in MoP for SoO, 6/9m in both Antorus and Tomb. Guild fell apart at start of WoD and wasn't interested in raiding towards the very end of legion and joined guilds with friends and raided pretty casually then when the guild stagnated on progress and I was changing schools.

What resources do you use to keep up with your class? *

Adamantly following AutomaticJak, the Focused Will discord, bothering Joshpriest on discord when he responds, and watching high end mythic+ and raiding content by some of the best Discipline priests in the world.

Provide a screenshot of your UI in a raid environment. *

Why do you want to join Potent? What sets you apart from other players? *

Feel free to brag as much as you want. If you're good at something, tell us.

The guilds that I have been in I have always been the big fish in the small pond. I enjoy being one of the best healers in almost any group, consistently. That doesn't make me the best. I need to get better. There's nothing impressive about being in the top 10% of players when you consider how many players that actually entails. I need a guild that can push me to be better, make me see where I fall short and build me up where I need the help. I've never had that. I've been one of the best healers I've known, and that the friends I have made have known as well. I played every healer in legion and geared every one of them to mythic ready and full cleared heroic while only my main was even in a guild. My goal was to have 80% overall for every healer for every fight at least, and I achieved that. That's fine and all, but I'm much more interested in being in a guild and environment where there's more to show for fight than a parse. I want to be surrounded with people who can push me to be the best that I can be, and I them. A bit of friendly competition on the meters never hurt anyone.

How did you hear about Potent? *

Tyniel, a trial from late legion. He has been a friend of mine since early on in legion and I've heard nothing but good things and I've always enjoyed raiding with and around friends.

Tell us a little about yourself. *

I'm very competitive, the primal drive to be the best at what I do pushes me to do better and is mostly to blame for what success I've had in my life, video games, raiding, and the relatively new healing endeavor as I had never healed prior to legion and I've been playing since early Cata. I enjoy a lighthearted, fun loving raid team that knows when to shut up and get serious. I'm tired of people not paying attention and wiping to heroic bosses. But I'm also not prepared to slave my life away for a game. I love it, its fun, and I, like most of us, play it all the time, but when raiding goes from fun to a chore or job, it stops becoming fun. I'd never want to day raid, but I do want to push high end mythic content and clear it before the tier is over. Wiping to mechanics that we've executed well feels a hell of a lot better than that one idiot with a bomb who blew up the whole group and now everyone else is dead.
